Management commentary

December was another strong month for MSCI Emerging Markets (EM) index with a 3.5% performance. EM equities outperformed developed market (DM) equities for the tenth month this year, bringing YTD return to 37.3%, the highest annual performance since 2009. MSCI EM index ended the year well ahead of developed market equities as MSCI World index 2017 return stands at 22.4%. Among key events this month was the signature in the US of the much debated tax reform plan into law, posing upside risks to US economic growth. Yet the USD declined in December, which was a support for the asset class, with rising 2018 EPS growth expectations. Oil continued its rally, ending the month up 4.8% at USD 66.6 for Brent, to reach its highest level since 2015 on the back of strong global growth. All EM sectors registered gains in December, with Healthcare (+7.5%), Consumer Staples (+6.0%) and Materials (+5.7%) leading the pack. Technology (+0.6%), the best performing EM sector in 2017 (+60.7%), was the laggard in December.

Country-wise, Greece (+16.4%) was the best performing market over the month, supported by banks and declining concerns over non-performing loans. Among strong performers were also Chile (+15.7%), mainly driven by the outcome of the second round of elections and Qatar (+14.7%) as the market recovered thanks to expectations of improving diplomatic environment in the region. The UAE (-0.2%) was the worst performing market, followed by Mexico (-0.1%) and Pakistan (0%).

Over the month, the fund underperformed its benchmark as all three engines of performance delivered had an overall negative impact. Country-wise, underweighting Chile, Turkey and Qatar were notable detractors, more than offsetting the positive contribution coming from underweighting Taiwan while overweighting Greece and South Africa. Sector allocation's negative effect mainly stemmed from our overweight consumer discretionary in South Africa. At the stock selection level, several companies in Korea dragged notably performance down while the largest detractor was PSG Group, a South Africa based investment holding company, which suffered from the expected placement of shares owned by Steinhoff, yet this was more than counterbalanced by the positive effect of not holding any Steinhoff International in the portfolio. In terms of movements, we sold our position in Amore, as we do not have any more upside potential to our fair value. The Korean cosmetics manufacturer is also suffering from a lack of innovation and disruption by new channels in its domestic market.

We maintain a positive view on Emerging Markets (EM) Equities both in absolute and relative terms for 2018. Economic rebound in most emerging countries should continue while valuation and flows remain broadly supportive.

Economic growth has finally started to improve in most emerging countries in 2017. We believe that it will continue next year as some key macro indicators have improved over the last three years and augur economic resilience. In general, current accounts have improved, inflation remains under control and low historically, fiscal discipline has been maintained, credit growth which was a concern a few years ago is more in line with nominal GDP and monetary policies are relatively accommodative. The GDP growth premium of Emerging vs Developed Markets, which has widened in 2017, should again increase in 2018, and has been historically a strong support for EM Equities. Given better macroeconomic fundamentals, we do not think valuations are extreme. This is even more the case vs. developed markets where valuation is more of an issue. In addition, real effective exchange rates in EM are relatively attractive and carry from local market still looks good, both indirectly supporting EM equities.
